EOI FOR CHANNELIZING ENERGY OF CHILDREN AND YOUTH THROUGH SPORTS

1.0 Introduction

Sport is often described as a language that everyone in the world can understand and can bring together and unite groups and communities. On an individual level, sport has the capacity to develop people's skills. In addition, sport has the power to attract large audiences and can play a major role in communicating positive awareness messages on key issues and assist in driving social change. At the most fundamental level, well-designed sport activities that incorporate the best values of sport – self-discipline, respect for one's opponent, fair play, teamwork, and adherence to mutually agreed upon rules – help individuals to build the values and communication skills necessary to prevent and resolve conflict in their own lives. Thus, Sports is an important instrument for promoting peace, harmony, brotherhood and for individual as well as community development.

Besides the State Governments, some of the NGOs in the country have been making a good effort using sports as a medium for development and peace. These programmes, beyond promoting physical activity, have included attempts to resolve differences between religious groups, between different cultural groups and empowerment of people with disabilities and of women.
